The Crypto.com Arena will be packed with high-wattage star power on Sunday night, with dozens of artists — including Lady Gaga, Justin Bieber, Sabrina Carpenter, Katseye, Rosé and Tyler, the Creator — set to perform at the 68th Grammy Awards.

The ceremony will air live on CBS and Paramount+ at 8 p.m. ET/5 p.m. ET. Cable-cutters can also stream the event live online through a variety of Live TV streamers with access to CBS, such as DirecTV, Sling TV and Hulu+ Live TV.

Trevor Noah will host the ceremony for the sixth consecutive year, and will conclude his run as this year will be his final time emceeing the event. Meanwhile, Harry Styles, Doechii, Chappell Roan, Teyana Taylor and several more have been tapped as presenters.

Also performing Sunday night are Celine Dion and Pharrell Williams, Post Malone, Leon Thomas, Lola Young, the Marias and Alex Warren. Reba McEntire, Brandy Clark and Lukas Nelson will also take the stage during the In Memoriam segment, while Ms. Lauryn Hill will perform in honor of D'Angelo and Roberta Flack and a tribute to Ozzy Osbourne will feature Post Malone with Watt, Slash, Duff McKagan and Chad Smith.

In terms of this year's nominations, Kendrick Lamar leads the pack this year with nine nods for his smash follow-through album "GNX" and single "Luther." Close behind is Lady Gaga with seven nominations, topping her previous record of six, which she scored back in 2010. Gaga ties for the second-most nominations with producers Jack Antonoff and Cirkut. Other big nominees this year include Carpenter (nominated in the top three categories) and rising artist Leon Thomas, who scored a surprising six nods.
